EVERY VOICE MATTERS

Today marks the kickoff to the 19TH Annual West Point Diversity and Inclusion Leadership Conference with the themes, "Every Voice Matters."

The event will bring cadets, staff, faculty, West Point alumni, and diversity and inclusion professionals together to discuss and share best practices on developing inclusive leaders and how to leverage their talent to enhance collaboration, engagement, and innovation within their organizations.

My daughter is currently attending USMAPS. The demographics of the Cadet Candidates this year is made up of ~ 50% declared minority heritage and of that ~40% African-American. If the main goal of our future US Army leaders is to lead a large diverse group of soldiers into battle...it makes perfect sense that D&I leadership is included. I'm extremely proud of how the US Army has embraced leadership in the modern era. And yes, that includes D&I education. I'm in my fifties and not much was provided back then, but the professionalism I have observed from the US Army officers I have gotten to know personally makes me proud to be an American. While the nightly news often highlights the worst of who we are, the attitudes and camaraderie of the cadets highlights the best of who we can be.

Christopher Levy I did not. My daughter is there now. From what it sounds like, to those that attended the conference, it was valuable to the attendees.

Thank you AOG, USMA and to everyone who helped make this happen! I left feeling energized and humbled by the leaders who participated and attended this event. I'd encourage anyone to attend in the future!

job 1, because it's easy; say the KKK is bad instead of just making everyone just assume.
